

We depend too much on computers

Technology and moving forward in using it is an important part of modern society. By making small steps, we managed to reach, what some consider a peak of technology. But it certainly is not. Computers are already part of our everyday life but i believe it will be even bigger part in the future. So are we too depended on using them?

The thing that computers make school work easier is a slippery slope to addiction. Especially nowadays when we can not meet people in person and our hole school process depends on computers. On the other hand spending the majority of daytime online makes you want to turn off the computer afterwards.

Computers offer us quick solutions to problems far more advanced then we would expect. However there are still people who are able to do the same, but it takes them longer. Nowadays, mostly young people depend more on computers by for example preferring the use of calculators rather then doing the calculations on their own.

In conclusion, I believe that technology will always continue to make our life easier but it is on us to find the right balance between depending on our brain and computers.
